Dear Book

A sacred burden is this life ye bear,
Look on it, lift it, bear it solemnly,
Stand up and walk beneath it steadily,
Fail not for sorrow, falter not for sin,
But onward, upward, till the goal ye win.

Frances Anne Kemble.

DEDICATION

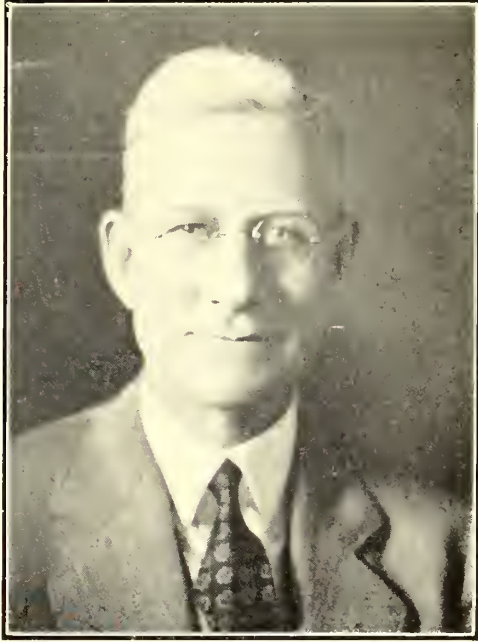

To the memory of our classmates,
Howard Foster Rice and Allen Sanford
Nelson, who have already reached the goal toward which we aim, this book is dedicated. They have given us ideals which inspire us. We miss their companionship now, but we realize that they remain our leaders, who have merely gone a little way ahead.

"It was a spring that never came;
But we have lived enough to know
What we have never had, remains:
It is the things we have that go."

Sara Teasdale

IN APPRECIATION

The members of the class of 1932 wish Mr. Gammons to know that they greatly value the part he has played in their high school years. They have felt and appreciated his influence in all their activities. Through his ready service and kindly advice, he has contributed much to their enjoyment of school.

To The Class of 1932:

As the years go by I hope that you will often recall your high school days with feelings of gratitude and pleasure and just a bit of sorrow because they are gone by. No matter where you go or what you do in the future, you will never live just the kind of life which you have experienced as members of Arlington High School.

It is the sincere wish of all of us who have had the very pleasant duty and responsibility of directing you in your school work and play that you have gained much to help you to live successful lives. We have confidence in you. We wish you good luck and great happiness.

HERMAN GAMMONS.

CLASS OF 1932

Class History

Richard Wilson

When we entered A. H. S., little did we realize the events that would take place which would go to make up the history of the Class of 1932.

As I think back to our earlier days at Arlington High School, I recall that we were not obliged to go through the ever troublesome freshman year, but had already reached a notable rank when first we entered the portals of the Senior High School. Our freshman days were spent at the East, Center and West Junior High Schools where we laid well the foundation for the years ahead. Although we eluded the title "freshman", the greenness of new-comers was very prominent in us and many were the times when we poor "sophs", late for classes and desiring directions to a certain room, were sent in exactly the opposite direction by a merciless upper-classman. The corridors were like labyrinths with countless rooms invariably open. Having stepped inside, only to find that the number on the door was not the one we were looking for after all, we made hasty exits amid the giggles of those who seemed to forget that they, too, were once sophomores. We were too confused to take time for the customary election of class officers, but somehow the year rolled on and we got along very well without leaders.

After a summer vacation which seemed all too short, we re-entered the familiar portals on the east and west sides of the building. Our return was somewhat joyful, for we realized that we were full-fledged juniors and that our beginners' days were over. The first important event of the year was the election of our officers. Philip Lane was elected president; Virginia Tate, vice-president; Helen O'Connor, secretary; and Ruth Rowland, treasurer. A few months later, in December, we were bereft of our beloved assistant principal and teacher, Mr. Philip Palmer.

During the spring of our junior year an event occurred which chiefly interested those students in rooms on the eastern side of the building, especially those in rooms 12 and 21—the "new building" was under construction. The students seemed to take a great interest—especially during classes—in the employees' accomplishment of each day's work.

The riveting machines were a great help to former whisperers, making it possible for them to talk out loud and not get caught—that is, not every time. When the building was nearly completed, an interesting weather-vane contest was held. Robert Cowdrey, '32, won. It was also during this spring that some of the boys discovered that "shorts" were not permissible at A. H. S., although college boys were trying to prove that they were what the well-dressed student should wear in warm weather. Long before school closed, a great deal of work was being done behind the school, and our long-hoped-for athletic field was beginning to take shape. The year soon came to a close, and the noble seniors willingly gave up their titles and home rooms to us, who were delighted to be known as seniors and "upper-classmen."

After the customary vacation, we returned in high spirits, anticipating a great experience as "dignified" seniors. With great pomp and ceremony we marched to the center section of the assembly hall where we could set an example (?) to the youngsters on our right and left. We were shocked upon hearing of the death of Howard Rice during the summer. Howard was a member of our class. He was captain-elect of the track team, and a member of the Student Council. Soon after the final year was under way, we assembled and elected leaders to guide us and encourage us to carry on. The results of the election were: Elmer Ziegler, president; Helen O'Connor, vice-president; Mary McGivern, secretary; and Ruth Rowland, treasurer. Mr. Morrill, who now became our assistant principal and teacher, was chosen class adviser. Mr. Dempsey, who succeeded Mr. Moody as superintendent of schools, was introduced to us.

In December of this year we were grieved by the death of Allan Nelson. Allan was a greatly admired classmate. He ranked high in his studies and was on the football squad, in the orchestra, Glee Club, and Student Council.

Ruth Garland, '32, went to Porto Rico in November. News from Ruth, published in the "Chronicle", told us that Porto Rico is a great place and that Ruth likes living there very much.

During our football season, we were greatly pleased to be enabled to watch the games from the grandstand of the Warren A. Pierce Field which had been completed during the summer.

Speaking of dignified Seniors! I think most of us lost a great deal of our dignity as well as prestige when it came our turn to exhibit our oratorical powers. How we, as lower-classmen, had enjoyed closely watching the embarrassed seniors nervously speak, in an endeavor to create in us an attitude which they themselves were far from feeling toward a certain subject! But now the tables had turned, and we were individually to be given the opportunity to see how the assembly hall looked from the center of the stage. For a short time the speakers did very well, our foremost orators being "Art" Sedoff and Weston Giles. But not many memorable orations had been presented before it came to pass that senior speeches were no longer required. As the students did not appear over and above anxious to make personal appearances, assemblies became less frequent, and the spirits of the seniors rose perceptibly.

During our three-year stay, we had a different football coach for each year: Mr. Charles Downes was coach the first year; Mr. William Sullivan the second; and Mr. Fred Ostergren came to the school during our senior year. Three of the members of our graduating class have been captains of various teams: Gene Curley was captain of our football team; "Phil" Lane was the captain of the hockey team; and "Tiny" O'Sullivan was the captain of the girls' basketball team. During our senior year, the majority of the student body voted to stop the publication of the "Clarion" and make every effort to put over the "Chronicle", a school paper which was to be published bi-weekly. The "Chronicle" has been very successful during its first year.

Here I must stop, for it is the ending of the history of the Class of Nineteen Hundred and Thirty-two. We are about to depart, but never shall we forget our happy days at A. H. S.

CLASS OF 1932

Class Oration

Arthur Sedoff

Friends and fellow students: we are met here to participate in one of the last events which marks the passing of the class of 1932 from the institution which has prepared us for our future careers. This is a day that will be remembered by all of us regardless of our future positions.

As we think back over our high school days we remember our studies, our athletics, our clubs, and our friends. What do we and what shall we prize most highly? What is and what will be most precious and valuable to us?

Is it, perhaps, our studies on which we have spent many, many hours? No, because our studies are merely the foundation of our education for our part in the world. True, they are very important, but just as the foundation is unnoticed when we contemplate the mansion built on it, so will our rudimentary knowledge be unnoticed when compared to the knowledge we shall gain.

Is it, then, athletics which are now valuable and precious to us? No, for important as it seems, the glory of the games, the rivalry and the thrill of victory—athletics is but one phase of school life.

Then is it the clubs which are most important? Obviously, not, for clubs thrive only as the amount of interest in them increases; their main purposes are merely to stimulate an interest in certain subjects, to provide recreation, and a means by which we can establish lasting social relations.

What is it, then, that carries over and is most valuable, most precious to us? Our friendships!—the friendships we made in class, in athletics, and in clubs. But why are friends so valuable, precious? For many reasons, one of which is that happiness and success in life can come only through friendships. Obviously, we can not be hermits and be truly happy and successful in life. Of course, if we were geniuses, we might be content in our lonely work, but few of us are geniuses and therefore we must gain our success and joy through our friends—there is no other way.

Friends are precious and valuable for other reasons, too: they strengthen our judgments; encourage us and inspire us to better and greater work. In our school days, when in doubt, we have gone to our friends, either classmates or teachers, for help and for the confirming of our judgments. In the world outside of school, this need for support becomes increasingly important. A doctor always calls a consultation in any serious case; the business man rarely acts on any important matter without a conference. As for inspiration, many great stories and plays have been woven around friendships; friends have provided the inspiration and encouragement for most of the world's great undertakings.

We have seen that friendship is valuable to us, now and later. Surely our high school must have provided opportunities for making friends, the most important factors for our happiness and success. Yes, it has: it has provided innumerable opportunities. In the classroom we have mingled with our classmates; we have worked together on the same subjects with the same end in view. Every opportunity has been afforded us to make friends. The purpose of the school's extra curricula activities is primarily to give us the opportunity to make friends.

In athletics we competed side by side, worked hard for a common goal, and this constant companionship could not fail to foster friendship. In the clubs we had the same aims, the same interests, and in this way the making of friends was simplified.

Out of school we shall not have all these opportunities for making friends. When we work in an office or in any other place, we shall have our own individual work to do; the other employees will have theirs. They may be of widely different ages; they may have different tastes, varied interests. The very things that fostered friendship in high schools,—the same interests, the same purposes—will be lacking.

Our friends are precious, dear to us. Tonight, graduation will mean the parting of the ways for many of us. Thus far we have come with our classmates—our friends. Now we take many roads, and when we travel these roads, we shall take with us the precious memory of Arlington High School—but our memory of Arlington will not be merely of a school building, or of the marks we received, it will be of friends, precious friends, old friends, and perhaps our sentiments will agree with Lowell's, who says:

“Old friends! The writing of those words has borne
My fancy backward to the gracious past,
The generous past, when all was possible,
For all was then untried; the years between
Have taught some sweet, some bitter lessons, none
Wiser than this,—to spend in all things else,
But of old friends to be most miserly,
Each year to ancient friendships adds a ring,
As to an oak, and precious more and more,
Without deservingness or help of ours,
They grow, and, silent, wider spread each year,
Their unbought rings of shelter or of shade,
Sacred to me the lichens on the bark,
Which Nature's milliner's would scrape away:
Most dear and sacred every withered limb!
’Tis good to set them early.”

Lowell wrote this poem under the willow trees along the Charles River. He appreciated his friends, realized their value, realized friends must be made in one's youth, that they mellow and become more dear as one goes along the road of life. Let us resolve now to cherish our friends, and make our high school friendships the foundation for friendships of later days.

Faculty

What is there about the name teacher that makes a pupil's attitude change the minute that name is mentioned? The word to many means cranky or unsympathetic, but when students enter Arlington High and come in contact with the different members of its faculty, they change this opinion, for our school is fortunate in having a remarkable group of teachers who are always ready to offer assistance.

The students regretted that Mrs. Moffat, history teacher and senior class adviser, had to leave school early this year because of illness in her family and all hope she will be able to return soon.

We students wish to thank the members of the faculty for their helpful cooperation during our high school years. The memory of their many kindnesses will always be cherished.

Student Council

First Row—Robert Hooker, John Maloon, John Collins.

Third Row—Laurin Phinney, Mr. Skinner, Verna Bond, Mr. Gammons, Mr. Morrill, Miss Blevins, Joseph Higgins.

The Student Council, consisting of ten seniors, six juniors, and four sophomores, had a very successful and active year. Problems, such as appearance of the school, traffic, and afternoon study rooms, have been under the consideration of different committees. As a result, the filing has been improved and the library has been opened for afternoon study.

Peter Golden, Helen O'Connor, and Dorothy Carroll attended the conference of all the State High School Student Councils held at Springfield this year. The information received at this convention was reported to the whole school at an assembly held for the purpose of acquainting the members of the school with the work of the Student Council.

The officers of the council are:

President—Peter Golden

Secretary—Helen O'Connor

YEAR BOOK

Dramatic Club

The Dramatic Club has enjoyed another very successful year. At the first dramatic assembly the club presented two one-act plays: My Dear, and Knives from Syria. At Christmas Where Lies the Child was given. The annual public play performed in the Town Hall, April 15, was Janice Meredith, a delightful comedy of the Revolutionary period.

Chronicle

The Chronicle, a bi-weekly newspaper, has been a new venture, started this year by Miss Riley and her class in journalism. To replace the Clarion, a desire was expressed for a paper of the journalistic type. The Chronicle contains news of the activities of the school, notes about teachers and students, editorials, jokes and comments, and athletic news. Elizabeth Cody, the editor-in-chief, and her staff have done a fine piece of work, and it is hoped that the Chronicle will have many more successful years.

Debating Club

2nd Row—Blakeley, Miss Lawton, Gunzelman.

THE Boys' Debating Club, one of the greatest prides of Arlington High School, was able to compete with only two other schools this year. In the first debate with Melrose, our boys, represented by Weston Giles, Francis Donovan, and Arthur Sedoff, upheld the affirmative side of Resolved—That the United States should join the League of Nations. They lost with a 2-1 decision. In the second debate with Norwood, Fred Parker, James Graham, and Carl Blakely upheld the affirmative side of Resolved—That the several states should enact legislation providing for compulsory unemployment insurance. There was one judge, whose decision Arlington won. The boys also gave a debate in assembly.

The officers of the club are as follows:

President—Francis Donovan.

Vice President—Fred Parker.

Secretary-Treasurer—Arthur Sedoff.

Faculty Advisor—Miss Lawton.

Glee Clubs

This year, the first and second A'Capella Choruses, combined with the Boys' Glee Club, presented the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, "The Mikado," under the direction of Miss Pierce and with the help of Miss Wardle and Mr. Einzig. Although members of the Girls' Glee Club were not able to take part in this production because of the adequate number of girls in the A'Capella Classes, they had a busy year singing in assemblies and contesting for the championship of all New England at Springfield.

The members of the Boys' Glee Club, inspired by the memory of their lost president, Allen Nelson, worked hard throughout the year to make themselves worthy of their departed leader.

The officers of the Glee Clubs are as follows:

Orchestra

1st Row—Bulser, Blumer, Waterfall, Greenlaw, Yasigian, Tolman, Bond, J. A. Easton, H. Osterlund, P. Lester, D. O'Neil, E. Murphy, P. Nelson.

2nd Row—Miss Pierce, Mr. Einzig (director), Fowler, A. Lester, McKenna, R. Phinney, P. Edwards, Joslin, Soula, Brenton, Byrne, Robinson, Lorentzen, Hawkes, Low.

3rd Row—Kaplin, Newgent, Shaw, Smith, Hooker, Penta, Gruzetman, Lowry, Cooke.

The orchestra this year has been excellent, and besides playing at school assemblies has furnished music for several outside occasions—a Teachers' Club reception for Dr. Dempsey, "The Mikado," "Janice Meredith", "The Dream of a Clown," a Teachers' Club Washington celebration, two recent Friends of the Drama plays, and for the Evening School graduation exercises. Each year it has been the custom of the orchestra to play at the annual Woman's Club May luncheon. This custom was followed this year. In January the orchestra played at the Veterans' Hospital in Bedford.

However, the biggest event of the year was the Massachusetts Orchestra and Band Contest held in Norwood, May twenty-first. Arlington was ranked in Class A., and spent several months in preparation. Mr. Einzig has directed nearly all the orchestra work this year, but Miss Pierce has conducted several times.

Band

The band of about twenty-five members led by the very active drum major, John A. Easton, has done more this year than in the past few years. It has played at the home football games, and made a very fine showing at the dedication of the Warren Peirce Athletic Field, October 12. Mr. Einzig has conducted the weekly rehearsals.

Three very fine players of the orchestra and band were lost in the recent drowning of Gino Santoliquido, who played the clarinet, and John Vogel and David Heinrich, who played the trumpets.

Science Club

The Science Club is the most recent activity that has been organized in A. H. S. Under the guidance of Mr. Fowler and Mr. Skinner interesting programs on photography, physics, biology, chemistry and radio have been presented at the meetings held every three weeks. The membership includes any A. H. S. pupil who is interested in science, and numbers about 50.

Last Minute Pep Rally

The rally held November 25 in the school auditorium with George "Bulger" Lowe, a former A. H. S. grid star, as guest speaker, served to arouse within the students a feeling of unity. Cheers were practiced at the close in preparation for the Melrose game on Thanksgiving Day.

Our Christmas Play

"Where Lies the Child?" has been selected as the Christmas Play to be given by the Dramatic Club.

The following club members, Martha Chipman, James Colgan, Hattie Critcherson, Russell Curry and Theodora Yates have been chosen to take the parts.

It is a one-act play which portrays one of the many opportunities that faces everyone at Christmas time—the kind of opportunity through which one can reach the heart of Christmas, and find a satisfying answer to the question—"Where lies the Child?"

Woodstock Speed Tests Awards

In the Woodstock Speed Test Awards for the month of November, three senior girls, Frances Carter, Gertrude Roy, and Barbara Annal, competed and received pins for accuracy and speed.

Frances, with a speed of 41.4 words a minute and no errors, received the blue and white honor pin, awarded to students writing 40 words a minute. Gertrude and Barbara, with 39.9 and 35.4 words a minute, received bronze pins, awarded for accuracy and speed.

Who's Who 1947

I dropped into Bob Grady's office today. He is now the "Bud Fisher" for the Boston Globe; humorous, yes. The walls of his office are adorned with some of the specimens he has collected while hunting. But what a change has come over him since he left the A. H. S. He is now short and round, with shiny bald head; however, there still remains some trace of his golden yellow curls. As I was leaving, Bob told me to give his regards to the High School.

There was a tennis match at Longwood courts today, and I was glad to hear that the winner was Dot Parks, '32. I was not surprised, because I recalled that Dot is being featured on all the sports pages; and I remembered she had gone out for sports in a big way while at A. H. S. It is rumored that she is going to represent America in the Davis Cup Matches. I left her surrounded by a group of admirers and a battery of cameramen.

To complete the day I decided to drop in and see the new High School laboratory. I found Mr. Skinner still presiding over the class. His hair had grayed, but as far as I could see the years had not taken a heavy toll. Mr. Skinner was somewhat surprised to see me, but he was delighted to show me around. He showed me his stamp album, finally filled, which he started way back in '32. In the laboratory I noticed Eddie Flynn. (Mr. Skinner said he was graduating this year.) When I left him, he was giving out three chapters for the night's homework.

Among Our Teachers

Mr. Raymond Morrill, our new vice principal finds Arlington High a sociable school, he told a reporter from "The Chronicle" in an interview in his office last week. He said, "I find the school very friendly and all my contacts with the pupils have been pleasant." Mr. Morrill graduated from the University of New Hampshire, and attended the Harvard Graduate School of Education. This equipment should prove a m p l e recommendation for a high position but in addition to the fundamental knowledge which he acquired in college are years of experience, both as a teacher and principal, which Mr. Morrill has had.

He was at one time principal of a school in Conway, New Hampshire and later taught in Stoneham and Chelsea. It was in the latter city that Mr. Morrill made the acquaintance of Mr. Gammons. He came to Arlington from Malden, where he had taught for five years.

He is a man of varied interests also, having coached football and basket ball while at Malden.

He says that his first impressions of our school have not changed. He still finds us friendly and sociable, and believes that the pupils, as a whole, like to co-operate with the teachers in their work.

Miss Testa, whom we all know as Mr. Gammon's secretary, is a very interesting and delightful person. She is a capable secretary who gets her work done quickly and accurately. When you enter the office in the morning, you are greeted with a bright smile and cheerful voice saying, "Good Morning." She deeply enjoys the "Copley Theatre Plays," and is interested in music and plays of any sort. Miss Testa is always a rooter for school activities.

Our Playground

Our High School should indeed feel privileged to claim, as its own, the new Warren S. Pierce Playground, which was formally dedicated on Columbus Day.

The grandstand, with a seating capacity for 5000; the football gridiron; the A. H. S. flag; the splendid location, situated, as they are, adjacent to the High School, all should contribute in making this playground a cherished and valued possession for our High School!

Cyrus E. Dallin, Famous Sculptor, Interviewed

In response to a hearty "Come in," the Chronicle reporter shakily opened the door of Cyrus Dallin's studio on Oakland Avenue. However, all fears vanished as she fell under the spell of his genial personality. "So you want some information," he said as he held out a clay-stained hand. "Well, look around and we'll see how to go about it."

Obediently, the reporter looked around. Besides pictures of Mr. Dallin's works and some finished pieces, there was a clay model of "The Signal," an equestrian statue upon which he has been working, and a plaster model of the late General Edwards. During the interview, Mr. Dallin was putting some finishing touches to the General's right foot. To her astonishment, the reporter discovered that statues are not made as a whole, but in sections which are glued and plastered together.

Mr. Dallin stated that he had never made a conscious start in sculpturing but that he was "born that way." As a child in the wilderness where he lived in a log cabin, he had no toys but those he made from wood. "After making marbles and other playthings," he said, "I became ambitious and made a head."

Mr. Dallin never saw a piece of statuary until he came East. His Indians, of which "Menotomy" is perhaps most familiar to Arlingtonians, are deservedly famous. "Indians were the natural subjects for my work as they were my childhood companions and I retained those childhood impressions which are after all the best. I love my work. Creation—the desire and ability to create — is the greatest thing in life!"

Among his first works was an equestrian statue called "The Signal of Peace," which he made while a student in Paris where he studied for two years. This statue was the first of a series depicting the history of the Indian in relation to the white man. The others are "The Medicine Man," warning his people, "The Protest," a warning to the white man, and "The Appeal to the Great Spirit," a last cry for help.

Mr. Dallin's game naturally enough, is archery. Besides his own bow and quiver of arrows which he uses in his association with an archery club, he has an Indian bow which hangs on the wall of his studio.

He graciously consented to allow the reporter to "sculpt," but after molding something that resembled a misdirected pancake, she decided to leave that art to geniuses, and stick to writing. As she left the studio, thanking Mr. Dallin for an enjoyable and interesting visit, she felt that she had spent a profitable hour with one of the nicest of the world's great men.

Imagine Her Embarrassment

Have you heard Miss Murdock's latest experience? As she stood before her desk preparing to vacate for the next teacher, a young fellow approached, program card in hand. "Aha," mused Miss Murdock, keenly, "a new pupil!" She turned to him and said with her customary good nature, "The teacher for the next period isn't here yet. Is this your first day here?" "I'm the substitute," answered the "boy."

Book Covers

"All books must be covered tomorrow." Herein lies the certainty that every known periodical will be advertised on the morrow.

Stunning blondes, smiling titians, and haughty brunettes dazzle the eyes of teachers and classmates. Not a few movie stars gaze languidly at the beholder, for movie fans parade their favorite star; vox-poppers advertise "Liberty"; domestic-minded young ladies bring "Good-Housekeeping" or "The Ladies' Home Journal"; boys use "The Saturday Evening Post," or their mothers' "McCall's."

Such vanity, color, and beauty were never seen outside a newstand.

LITERARY DEPARTMENT

FOR THE FUTURE

Margaret Bailey

WE who are so soon to graduate shall leave behind us a happy three years of living. We shall leave a routine that has filled our days with satisfying regularity. There have been for all of us times so weary that we have rebelled against the books we were carrying home. There have been those blessed Saturdays which divided the long drudging weeks of the school year, and the carefree joy of our summer vacation when for a time we could forget our evenings of study. Yet always we have come back in the fall looking eagerly ahead into the school year. Each autumn we have returned for work with a steady, refreshed feeling.

Now this school life is nearly over. In a few weeks we pass out of it into another. A different routine will take the place of the one we know: a new work will fill our lives with its regularity. As I look back over these happy days and send my thoughts over the unknown future, there is one prayer I make, that I may never quite forget the friendships and the satisfying work of these last three years.

THE AWAKENING OF THE SENSES

Miriam Shedd

AWAKE, oh ye sleepy heads! There is a life before you worth living if you would but open your eyes to see it. That is the challenge of high school to those who are commencing as sophomores, and that also is the realization of us who are graduating. Somehow, during the last three years, the door of the world has been opened wider to us: what we have seen has made us thirst for more. We feel strong, confident, and anxious to live our lives according to our own consciences. We want our share of the open seas even as our parents and teachers have had before us.

Now as we stand on the bows of our ships and tenderly handle our telescope, we wonder whom we should thank for this precious instrument through which we have been taught to sight the land marks and to see the danger signals. First we think of our parents, and then we think of our school, through which we have been patiently guided. Our teachers' never faltering efforts to lead us down the river of education have not been in vain, have they? Surely there must have been some worthy motive behind their struggle.

We are told that it will be years before we can fully appreciate our high school education, but it seems to me that even now we can distinguish some of the blessings which have been freely given us. It might be sufficient to say that our senses have been awakened. What countless things we are able to appreciate because we have learned about them through the instruction of our teachers at Arlington High School! For example, we never could have understood the true worth of Milton's poems had we not been taught by some one who knew. How much more do we appreciate the privilege of living now that we have come to realize what an infinite number of things there are to be done and enjoyed! Pity the man or woman who takes pleasure only in gossiping about his neighbors or reading cheap magazines. We may be cast away on a desert island or exiled into the barren wastes of Siberia, but we can never be deprived of the education begun at Arlington High School.

THOUGHTS OF APPROACHING GRADUATION

Elsie Foss

THIS essay on graduation is only one in many. Other ideas have been and will be expressed on this subject, all probably voicing the same general opinion. But herein I will try to set forth my thoughts on approaching graduation.

To be frank, the main thing that bothers me is: when I come around for my diploma, will Mr. Gammons find it immediately, or shall I stand there scarlet and unhappy while he shuffles the diplomas about in the rack? This, of course, is a very minor detail, and should be a negligible one, but—there it is.

Then, after I have thought over the details of that great day, I shall commence to think of the oddity of being through. School does grow on one, for even though it may not contain all the comforts of home, there is a certain pang felt in leaving it.

I shall very probably work during this summer, so the method of applying for a position distracts me.

Shall I loiter about in employment offices and chew gum in a languid manner, or shall I wait until I see a suitable looking "help wanted" advertisement, and hurry off to answer it, only to find that it is not so desirable as it may have seemed?

After spending my summer at work, I shall creep in at the door of the nurses' training school which I hope to enter (creeping because I expect to feel intensely inferior). The Powers That Be will peer at me as though I were an unimportant sort of insect, and will look into large books, and cough.

Then, I have heard, one becomes a slavey for at least six months. I can conjure up a vivid picture of myself scrubbing a grimy floor; or washing endless dishes. Perhaps, while thus wearily occupied, I shall suddenly see the humor of it all, and I may laugh aloud and be frowned upon by a passing Power.

So time will pass until I come to another graduation, when I shall have to wonder in a perturbed way once again whether "they" will find my diploma immediately or whether I shall stand there, scarlet and miserable in my stiff white uniform, while "they" search.

FUTILE HOLIDAYS

Weston W. Giles

While all about me great men ponder on profound questions and theories relative to our civilization, I pause to reflect on the futility of holidays in relation to the benefits which I receive from them. Of what value is a holiday to me? Now this is a very vital question. Well, I shall attempt to describe how one of these auspicious occasions affects me. You may decide for yourself as to the merits of this institution which plays such an important part in our lives.

CLASS OF 1932

A week previous to one of these momentous affairs, I realize that a day's leave of absence from toil is soon to be granted unto the great mass of struggling students. And so, anticipation stirs me on. Each night I forge into my homework with great intentness. I do not grumble because of the burden of this type of study which some teacher (evidently a heartless creature) places upon my shoulders. Days pass in their own inimitable way, and prior to the great event at an appointed time some expressions heard only from the uninformed are used by me as I manifest the fact that the eve before the holiday is at hand. As a rule, I may do something rash at times like this. However, I have not yet acquired the habit or art of smoking cigars as have some students or drinking (since no high school pupil thinks of such a thing), so I go to a quiet motion picture performance, perhaps at the Regent or some other theatre of equal repute (partially fanciful exaggeration). The next morning I languish on my bed as long as possible, quite forgetting any plans which I might have entertained for the day. When I arise, the family does not go auto riding as many do, for although we may have a mortgage on our house, we haven't got the car to go with it. Even though some kind relatives may appreciate us and come and take us for an airing in their car, I usually pass the day in peaceful oblivion, until I am jerked back to reality about bedtime, when I remember the homework which has not been touched. A few, feeble and futile attempts to remedy this situation only convince me that I need sleep, and so I retire, heedless of the complications which will set in on the following day.

I have tried to picture the futility of my holidays and show you why I have adopted the theory that holidays in relation to my welfare are of little benefit. But then, it doesn't matter! It's just another uncompleted theory thrust upon an unsuspecting somebody . . . you!

MY CHILDHOOD PET

Werner Schmidt

When I was a boy of twelve, our next door neighbors decided to spend their summer vacation in Dalmatia. Who ever heard of Dalmatia? Nobody, but just the same they wanted to go there. For those who are not familiar with the geography of Europe, I will tell what little I know about it. It is a Yugo-Slav province, east of the Adriatic Sea. The Dalmatians have very primitive customs and no political importance whatsoever.

As I said before, our neighbors went to Dalmatia, and I would have given anything to be able to go with them. But as this was out of the question, they promised to bring me a present, something peculiar which I had never even seen before. They brought me a turtle. A small, peculiar smelling affair with tiny black eyes like two shoe buttons. I was never able to determine whether this creature was male or female, but I always had the feeling that it must be female, so I named it Lizzy. I had this Lizzy in my possession for over three years, and I admit I grew very fond of her.

Her first week, Lizzy lived in a soap box and slept most of the time. Then I realized that this would not do, and built a large wooden frame, which I laid on the grass around Lizzy. But now Lizzy seemed to wake up. She did not like her prison and tried to climb over the fence. As she found this impossible, she started to dig with an amazing speed. In a few minutes she dug a hole large enough so that she could crawl under the fence and run around. Once out of the garden, nothing could stop her. She marched like a soldier, unafraid, heading always in the same direction.

But she never reached her destination, for some child would always see her and tell me in a great hurry. Nobody in the neighborhood dared to touch her; everybody thought she would bite or poison him. This kept on for a month or two, until I grew tired and felt that something had to be done. But what, I did not know and consequently asked my father, who advised me to put her on a chain. Yes, but how could I chain a turtle? Around the neck? Impossible. She had no neck; all she had was a small head looking out of the shell, shooting back as fast as lightning whenever anybody came near her. Chaining her around one of her skinny legs was out of the question, too, because her legs were of equal thickness, or rather thinness, throughout their entire length.

There was only one thing left to do: drill a hole in the outer part of her shell and fasten the chain there, like a watch-chain on a watch. But that was too much for my tender nerves; I should never be able to drill a hole in my Lizzy. Supposing the drill slipped and hurt her? For a week the problem tortured my brain and kept me awake at night, until I decided to let a friend do this cruel piece of work for me. The drill did not slip, and everything worked out well, but, nevertheless, I felt very sorry for poor Lizzy.

The following day I fastened a brass chain to Lizzy's shell. Lizzy must have thought she was free, because she marched off as usual like a soldier. But she did not get very far; the chain limited her excursion, and Lizzy was thrown on her back. This did not teach her a lesson, however, as it should have done; it did not even discourage her trying again. She tried for half an hour, until I was not able to bear it any longer and loosened the chain to let her run. Never again did I try to keep Lizzy a prisoner against her will. Whenever she wanted to stay in, I let her stay in; and whenever she wanted to go, I let her go.

During the winter Lizzy slept under the bookcase, never stirring a limb, never wanting anything except to be left alone. In the early spring she woke up, dustier and thinner than ever. I was always more than delighted to see her and at once gave her a bath in lukewarm water, which she disliked very much. Then I dried her with a towel, put her on my lap and fed her with tomatoes. I had ample time to watch her. She stood on a tomato with her front legs and tore off small bits and swallowed them very slowly. She ate calmly one piece after another without looking up. She must have been very hungry. Occasionally, when the tomato juice ran into her eyes or nose, she opened her mouth wide, and one could hear a hissing noise, the only sound she could produce.

When she had finished her meal, she crawled down the stairs, always falling on her head when she slid from one stair to the next. I wondered if Lizzy did not know that she should have pulled her head back into her shell and simply let herself slide down the stairs. Maybe she had a reason for doing what she had done, but has a turtle any brain at all? Does she ever think or just act by instinct? I have never noticed the slightest trace of intelligence in her, but are there animals without any intelligence whatever? I have not found out yet, for one morning, when I returned from school, Lizzy was gone. She has not come back. Somebody made turtle soup, very probably; and, if so, I hope he had indigestion.

AN EVENING AT THE MITRE TAVERN

Thomas Lord

On entering the Mitre Tavern on Fleet Street, we meet a noticeable aroma of coffee and tobacco smoke. It is about seven o'clock in the evening and the men have gathered at the tavern to discuss the latest news, or meet their friends.

The interior of this coffee-house is very simple. The walls have no decoration except for two or three old swords and sheaths and a row of shelves containing some crockery mugs. At one end is a counter where the proprietor works and beside this is the old fire-place, on the hearth of which are five or six coffee pots simmering in the heat of a log fire. Aside from two private compartments, the remainder of the room is full of plain, cheap, wooden tables and benches. From the ceiling hangs a cluster of candles and on each table is a candle. In one of the compartments is Samuel Johnson and three of his friends, Goldsmith, Boswell, and Reynolds. As they are the most noted of those present at the tavern let us turn our attention to their compartment.

Goldsmith and Johnson are having a heated discussion about the literary qualities of a poem a clergyman from Windsor has written. Goldsmith is pointing out the good parts, and Johnson is picking out the flaws. After about ten minutes of thinking, the two of them condemn the poem as worthless. At the end of this discussion, Reynolds and Boswell exchange ideas on an art exhibit which is now going on. Johnson adds comments from time to time.

In a few minutes Burke and Gibbons enter the Mitre Tavern and join the other four men. With this very remarkable group of critics holding a conference over all sorts of subjects, the evening is spent in debates and conversation. Johnson's loud voice now and then rises above the steady babble of the patrons of the Tavern. When it does, every one stops to listen as he knows that Johnson's criticisms are valuable. The time wears on, but the members of the Literary Club still carry on the discussion without any loss of enthusiasm; each holds to his own opinion.

The other patrons begin to leave at ten o'clock and by half past ten the only ones left are the members of the club, the proprietor, and his wife. The proprietor begins to straighten up his shop and get things ready for the next day's business. At the indication that the shop is closing the club adjourns and the members leave the Tavern. As they go to their homes, they finish the discussion of their last topic.

It is this club that met at different taverns and coffee-houses that maintained a standard and criticized all works according to it regardless of what matter it dealt with.

The field hockey team was very successful this past season.. It tied for second place in the Mystic Valley League. The defense played exceptionally well, having only three goals scored against them during the season. Margaret Scannell received honorable mention on the All-Boston Team. We all wish Captain Pearl Gibson and her team, under the supervision of Miss McCarthy, a successful season next year.

On October 12, Columbus Day, the new Warren A. Peirce field was dedicated. Mr. Wunderlich, chairman of the park commission, presented the field and it was accepted by Mr. Stratton, chairman of the school board. Dr. Dempsey also gave a short speech.

After this the Arlington-Winchester game was played, and although Arlington threatened constantly, Winchester held to a 0 - 0 tie. Despite the fact that Coach Ostergren was new to Arlington, and had a green squad to coach, he put out a fine team, winning six and tying one out of ten games.

At the annual Arlington-Melrose game on Thanksgiving Day, the record crowd was thrilled by the hard-fought battle. Melrose proved to be the superior team, winning 7 - 0.

Mr. Johnson's Basketball team had a successful season, although it had lost most of its veterans. The game with Chelsea is considered by Arlington Basketball fans one of the greatest games ever played in the Arlington gym. Arlington led by not more than two points through the first three periods, but in the last period Chelsea forged ahead until, just as the whistle blew to end the game, "Husky" Crovo sank a long, looping shot, giving the victory 13 - 12 to Arlington.

Mr. Burke's Ice Hockey team, although not so successful as last year's great team, managed to maintain Arlington's reputation as a hockey town. The best game of the season was with Melrose, the champions. In this fast-moving contest, Arlington played their best hockey of the season. The old rivalry between Arlington and Melrose showed itself strongly in this red hot battle. Both teams fought desperately but uselessly to break up the tie. The final period came to a close with the score one to one and both teams thoroughly exhausted.

As the Year Book goes to press, we have no list of letter men from the Track team. As usual "Doc" McCarthy has his candidates out early, and we wish him a year as successful as last.

The captaincy has been left open out of respect to the memory of Howard Rice who was elected at the close of last season.

Coach: WILLIAM T. McCARTY

Manager: JAMES SLINEY

Letter Men: M. RICE, CAPT.; W. McDONALD, J. CRONIN, E. HANLON, R. WERNER, S. LOWERY, G. ROLLINS.

Arlington's 1931 Cross Country team had only a fairly successful season, though not because it lacked ambition, perseverance, or fine coaching. The team was made up for the most part of sophomores who, by the time they are seniors, should be developed into a fine team. We wish Captain elect Hanlon a most successful season next year.

Tennis

Tennis, like golf, is a coming sport and should be supported by the students. The matches are held at Spy Pond Field and nearby towns. Usually, Mr. Burke takes his team to Exeter Academy where they spend a much enjoyed day. The team hasn't many candidates and welcomes all newcomers. Many exciting matches may be seen this spring at no expense, on the Arlington Courts.

Golf

Golf is a coming sport in the Arlington High School and should be supported by the students. Mr. Robinson is glad to give each one who is interested in golf a tryout for the team. If unsuccessful, one may follow the players around the course, giving encouragement as in any other sport.

Last year's team had many excellent golfers, including Joseph Looney, Paul Roe, James Cohen, and others. This year's team also has some good golfers, and many promising juniors and sophomores.

The following matches are to be played at Arhmont and nearby courses:
